PLANS

by Daniella Moshe-
Romano

I'm waiting for something to save me,
To change me,
To rearrange my thoughts.
I'm waiting
For the fruits that my patience has brought me.
I'm waiting for emancipation.
I'm hiding in darkness,
And turning books into friends.
I'm lost, but I'm safe,
I'm alone,
I've spent years carving darkness
Into a comfortable home.

Away from the light,
the panic,
the people,
the traffic,
the madness.

I'm waiting for the day to come
When each of us is all caught up;
I'm waiting till I have the guts to be what I claim,
The guts to come out of my bed and its bundle of covers
And confront my fears without trepidation.
I'm tired of always making plans
And never making changes.
